We would stay up late at night at the group home we lived in. We shared the same room. We would talk all kinds of stuff. Her son was a big part of our conversations. She missed him so much and was determined to make her life right to bring him home. We both eventually became of age and created new lives for ourselves. I remembered working for Society Bank downtown Cleveland and I ran into her. She was becoming a paralegal and I was working in collections for the bank. I'm so happy she found peace and love. God bless her and her family.
