Proctorville fisherman's catfish qualifies for world record status

The death of Proctorville caught a fathead catfish that qualifies as a world record holder. It was big enough for either a West Virginia or Ohio record. Smith, 24, and a gasoline station attendant at the Proctorville High Oil service station, caught a 20 1/2-pound fathead back on Aug. 21. He and two friends, Mike Snook of Chesapeake and Jerry Lattinovich of Proctorville, were fishing the Ohio River near the Columbus Locks & Dam when the catch occurred. These eyes obviously were shooting for a big fish. Smith was angling with 30-pound test line. And that, friends, is the secret to his success. The National Fresh Water Fishing Hall of Fame in Hayward, Wis., maintains active files on all summer sport fishing records and recognizes world records for fathead catfish by 20 line weights, starting with 3-pound test and going up—4, 6, 8, 10, 12, 14, 16, 18, 20, 25, 30, 36, 42, 50 and 60-pound.

using a dead bluegill, which he found on the riverbank, for bait. "There are some big catfish up there. We had one as big as this, but it was not as big as our another one." Smith said he caught the fish about 2 a.m. and struggled with it for about a half hour before getting it into his boat. The fish measured 41 inches long. As it comes to the species, it had a tremendous head. The mouth was 6 inches wide. Although there have been several fishermen in the Huntington-Ohio River system, the world record for a fathead taken on sport (rod-and-reel) lures is 31 pounds, 4 ounces. That fish came out of Lake Lewisville in Texas in 1955 and was caught by Mike Rogers. Rogers caught his world record on 15-pound test line. State records do not vary by line weight. The Ohio record for a fathead is 70 pounds, 8 ounces and the West Virginia record is 70 pounds. Smith's fish wasn't the only big one taken out of the Ohio recently. Tom Dawson of Norway Avenue, a graduate of Huntington East High School last spring, caught a 25-pounder last Saturday night. Dawson said he first thought he had snagged something, but when he saw his catch "I nearly passed out," he said. Dawson said he was fishing in the Ohio River near Crown City, Ohio. He caught the big one on 8-pound test line and was using a crayfish for bait. The fish measured 39 1/2 inches long and weighed 25 pounds. He took a few pictures, then turned home. "We figured it was too big to eat," Dawson said. "And besides, I might want to catch it again one day."

Bill Jahn of Proctorville, Leonard Dalton of Jackson, C teamed up last weekend to win the Barr Oul Classic, an all-night, eight invitationally team fishing contest at Summersville Lake. The brainchild of Ed Lewis, Barr Oul Classic is the eighth annual Barr Oul event. It has an interesting format for participants there are paydays — first night, second and third. Bill Chapman and Melvin were the leaders after the first with 12 fish and 18 pounds. 3 in. Jahn said he and Dalton had pounds, 6 ounces the first which did not count. But the 11 fish — 20 pounds — the night, including four fish — pound rings.
